LegeraD.—The mountain forcests of Pastoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Sprites and Elves who, like the Phantom Bancers of Germany, delight to entrap travelers into their realms, and torneat them with their mischievous action. Having the power of transferring the spirit, they often, in their malicious gambois, give life to the newly dead. Statues, rocks and trees are seen fantatically moving in the forest, but it is only during the Day they retain their incittious existence; at the approach of night they resume their immebility.

"This is every way a remarkable book. We have before us, in this younse, the most generally popular work of the greatest man of his time, with a Commentary of Annotations by the man who, of all living authors, approaches nearest in many of his intellectual characteristics to Bacon himself..... We cannot but regard it as a boon conferred upon all educated men, that this volume has been given to the world. Nor must we omit to remark, in this age of readers for mere entertainment, that although the volume be a large one, written by an Archbishop, and constrting of comments upon the thoughts of a great pfilloso pher, the book is invested with such as attractive interest that it cannot fail to prove a readable and entertaining one, even minds unaccustomed to high-class thought, and incapable of severe thinking.... We have given but an imperfect idea Archbishop Whately's Annotatione—of their range, their eagency, their wisdom, their experience, their practical instruction, their wit, their eloquence. The extracts we have quote are like a sheaf of wheat brought from a field of a hundre acres; but we trust our readers may be induced to study the book for themselves." On Failary.
